Jennifer Freeman

Chief Executive Officer of Peace Geeks

Dear colleagues, partners and friends,

On behalf of the organizing committee, it is with great pleasure that we extend a warm and heartfelt welcome to the Metropolis Identities Summit in the unceded territories of the xʷməθkwəy̓əm (Musqueam), Skwxwú7mesh (Squamish), and Səlílwətaʔ/Selilwitulh (Tsleil-Waututh).

This year's Summit focuses on the particular ways in which our individual, intersectional and multifaceted identities continue to shape our collective identity as a nation. As misinformation and disinformation about diversity and migration continue to challenge us, our collective reflections on addressing discrimination, racism, and prejudice, have an opportunity to open new spaces to listen, learn and grow.

As we reflect on the ways in which our identities are at turns politicized, polarizing, precious, and personal, we would like to heed a call from local First Nations to consider how we are in relationship with one another, to ourselves, and to the land and environment where we are.

Neelam Sahota

Chief Executive Office, DIVERSEcity
Community Resources Society

Your presence, knowledge, and the diverse experiences and lived facets of your own identities which you bring to here, are valuable tools for our conversations over the coming days. Together, we will explore strategies to reduce social and economic disadvantage, improve access to health care, housing and education, and foster active citizen engagement to build communities which serve all of us.

We hope that this Summit will be a catalyst for meaningful exchanges, new perspectives, and enduring collaborations.

Once again, welcome to the Metropolis Identities Summit in Vancouver. May your time here be enlightening, inspiring, and filled with opportunities to listen, learn and grow.

Welcome Message from Co-Chairs

Mot de Bienvenue des co-présidents

Jennifer Freeman
Directrice générale de Peace Geeks

Chers collègues, partenaires et amis,

Au nom du comité organisateur, c'est avec grand plaisir que nous accueillons chaleureusement le Sommet des identités de Metropolis dans les territoires non cédés des x̣m̄əθkw̄əȳəm (Musqueam), des Skwxwú7mesh (Squamish) et des Səlílwətaʔ/Selilwitulh (Tseil-Waututh).

Le sommet de cette année se concentre sur les façons particulières dont nos identités individuelles, intersectionnelles et multiformes continuent de façonner notre identité collective en tant que nation. Alors que la désinformation sur la diversité et les migrations continue de nous interpeller, nos réflexions collectives sur la lutte contre la discrimination, le racisme et les préjugés sont l'occasion d'ouvrir de nouveaux espaces d'écoute, d'apprentissage et de croissance.

Alors que nous réfléchissons à la manière dont nos identités sont à la fois politisées, polarisées, précieuses et personnelles, nous aimerions répondre à l'appel des Premières nations locales pour réfléchir à la manière dont nous sommes en relation les uns avec les autres, avec nous-mêmes, avec la terre et l'environnement où nous nous trouvons.

Votre présence, vos connaissances et les diverses expériences et facettes vécues de vos propres identités que vous apportez ici sont des outils précieux pour nos conversations au cours des prochains jours. Ensemble, nous explorerons des stratégies visant à réduire les désavantages sociaux et économiques, à améliorer l'accès aux soins de santé, au logement et à l'éducation, et à encourager l'engagement actif des citoyens pour construire des communautés qui nous servent tous.

Nous espérons que ce sommet sera le catalyseur d'échanges fructueux, de nouvelles perspectives, d'un dialogue constructif et de la mise en œuvre d'une stratégie de développement durable.

Une fois de plus, nous vous souhaitons la bienvenue au Sommet des identités de Metropolis à Vancouver. Que votre séjour ici soit éclairant, inspirant et rempli d'occasions d'écouter, d'apprendre et de grandir.

Welcome all to the 7th annual edition of the Metropolis Identities Summit in the beautiful city of Vancouver. At our last Metropolis Conference I shared a concern about the unprecedented number of Canadians saying there were too many immigrants coming to the country. Since then, surveys reveal that the percentage holding this view has risen yet further. Several observers attribute this shift in public opinion to mounting concerns over higher living costs, affordable and/or available housing and global instability.

We're witnessing a worrisome rise in anti-immigrant sentiment across much of the globe reflected in increased stigmatization of newcomers and mounting intergroup tensions. The acrimonious election campaign currently taking place in the United States has seen some of the most disturbing instances of newcomer vilification. Canada is by no means immune to this behavior and regrettably our own history provides far too many such examples.

This edition of the Metropolis Identities Summit arrives at a critical time in the national conversation about migration and the state of intergroup relations. The theme of the Summit proposes that we collectively consider what underlies evolving opinion and how best to address the preoccupations of our increasingly diverse population. The plenary sessions will consider ways to respond to these issues and how we can diminish tension between communities, foster dialogue and strengthen intergroup relations. The Summit will invite reflection on good practices in combating discrimination, racism and prejudice.

For our part we've just launched at Metropolis CAiRES (Canadian Advocacy for immigrant Refugee Entry and Settlement) and will be working to remind Canadians of the important contribution of newcomers to Canada and that welcoming newcomers to Canada is a widely shared Canadian value.

I want to express my appreciation to our Summit co –chairs, Neelam Sahota and Jennifer Freeman. As well thank you to our many partners and to our principal stakeholders Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada and the Department of Canadian Heritage. As always, much thanks to our talented coordinating team at ACS-Metropolis led by James Ondrick and Shania Bramble.

Welcome Message

Mot de Bienvenue

Jack Jedwab

CEO and Director, ACS-Metropolis

PDG et Directeur, AEC-Metropolis

Bienvenue à tous pour la 7ème édition annuelle du Sommet Metropolis Identities dans la belle ville de Vancouver. Lors de notre dernière conférence Metropolis, j'ai fait part de mon inquiétude concernant le nombre sans précédent de Canadiens affirmant qu'il y avait trop d'immigrants dans le pays. Depuis, les enquêtes révèlent que le pourcentage de ceux qui partagent ce point de vue a encore augmenté. Plusieurs observateurs attribuent cette évolution de l'opinion publique à des préoccupations croissantes concernant l'augmentation du coût de la vie, le manque de logements abordables ou disponibles et l'instabilité mondiale.

Nous assistons à une montée inquiétante des sentiments anti-immigrés dans une grande partie du monde, qui se traduit par une stigmatisation accrue des nouveaux arrivants et des tensions croissantes entre les groupes. La campagne électorale acrimonieuse qui se déroule actuellement aux États-Unis a donné lieu à certains des cas les plus troublants de dénigrement des nouveaux arrivants. Le Canada n'est pas du tout à l'abri de ce comportement et, malheureusement, notre propre histoire fournit beaucoup trop d'exemples de ce type.

Cette édition du Sommet des identités de Metropolis arrive à un moment critique de la conversation nationale sur la migration et l'état des relations intergroupes. Le thème du sommet propose que nous examinions collectivement ce qui sous-tend l'évolution de l'opinion et la meilleure façon de répondre aux préoccupations de notre population de plus en plus diversifiée. Les sessions plénières examineront les moyens de répondre à ces questions et la manière dont nous pouvons réduire les tensions entre les communautés, favoriser le dialogue et renforcer les relations intergroupes. Le sommet invitera à réfléchir sur les bonnes pratiques en matière de lutte contre la discrimination, le racisme et les préjugés.

Pour notre part, nous venons de lancer à Metropolis CAiRES (Canadian Advocacy for immigrant Refugee Entry and Settlement) et nous nous efforcerons de rappeler aux Canadiens l'importante contribution des nouveaux arrivants au Canada et le fait que l'accueil des nouveaux arrivants au Canada est une valeur canadienne largement partagée.

Je tiens à exprimer ma gratitude aux coprésidentes du sommet, Neelam Sahota et Jennifer Freeman. Je remercie également nos nombreux partenaires et nos principaux intervenants, Immigration, Réfugiés et Citoyenneté Canada et le ministère du Patrimoine canadien. Comme toujours, un grand merci à notre talentueuse équipe de coordination d'ACS-Metropolis, dirigée par James Ondrick et Shania Bramble.

Please note that the Metropolis Social Determinants of Health (MSDH) conference sessions are part of the Metropolis Identities program. Delegates interested in attending sessions on either topic are welcome to join both. Sessions related to MSDH are highlighted in red.

Note that a number of sessions of the conference focus specifically on enhancing knowledge about Canadian identities and support efforts at combating racism and discrimination. The mentioned sessions are highlighted purple in the program. Some of the sessions have been made possible through the assistance of the department of Canadian Heritage and the Canada History Fund.

Veillez noter que les sessions de la conférence sur les déterminants sociaux de la santé de Metropolis (MSDH) font partie du programme Identité de Metropolis. Les délégués souhaitant assister à des sessions sur l'un ou l'autre sujet sont invités à s'inscrire aux deux. Les sessions relatives aux déterminants sociaux de la santé sont surlignées en rouge.

Il convient de noter qu'un certain nombre de séances de la conférence sont spécifiquement consacrées à l'amélioration des connaissances sur les identités canadiennes et au soutien des efforts déployés pour lutter contre le racisme et la discrimination. Les sessions mentionnées sont surlignées en violet dans le programme. Certaines de ces sessions ont été rendues possibles grâce à l'aide du ministère du Patrimoine canadien et du Fonds canadien de l'histoire.

Global Political Change and its Impact on Migration

This year we're witnessing major changes in political leadership in immigrant receiving countries with elections in the UK, France and Mexico amongst others. On November 5 the United States will hold elections that risk having a considerable impact on the future of migration across the Americas. The panellists will discuss what the changes imply for immigration policies and multinational cooperation on migration.

Les changements politiques mondiaux et leur impact sur les migrations

Cette année, nous assistons à des changements majeurs dans la direction politique des pays d'accueil des immigrants, avec des élections au Royaume-Uni, en France et au Mexique, entre autres. Le 5 novembre, les États-Unis organiseront des élections qui risquent d'avoir un impact considérable sur l'avenir des migrations dans les Amériques. Les panélistes discuteront de ce que ces changements impliquent pour les politiques d'immigration et la coopération multinationale en matière de migration.

Developing an EIDAD Framework and Harmonia Committee

Polycultural will present the process of developing an EIDAD Framework, aiming to cultivate equity, inclusion, appreciation, and belonging for all clients, staff, volunteers, and partners, while enhancing experiences for historically marginalized groups. The presentation outlines project stages: establishing a Harmonia Committee, conducting research including a Diversity Survey, holding focus groups with various client demographics and leadership, interviewing individuals with disabilities, and reviewing organizational policies. The final result is the development of the EIDAD Framework and an action plan as well as the scorecard to communicate equity assessment results to stakeholders

Canada faces an impending healthcare workforce shortage—projected at 117,000 by 2030. IEHPs play a vital role, yet foreign-trained nurses stagnate at 9%, while IEHP doctors comprise 26% of physicians. National Newcomer Navigation Network (N4) leveraged its unique community of practice structure to convene the diversity of stakeholders to identify and address concrete barriers to IEHP optimal employment. Actionable, concrete recommendations were identified and actioned through education, tools, and advocacy efforts. Attendees will gain an understanding of the barriers, tools and resources available to address these labor market inequities, including a training program, visual pathways, employer toolkit, and provincial promising practices.

Barriers to employment: Experiences of Internationally Educated Nurses (IENs) in Canada

Canada continues to face a nursing workforce shortage. In the growing demand for nurses, Internationally Educated Nurses (IENs) play a significant role in not only filling those gaps but also meeting the needs of the diverse populations. Despite the need, IENs face significant barriers and challenges to find employment and integrate into the Canadian workforce. Based on a review of literature, interviews, and focus group discussions with IENs, this workshop will present lived experiences of IENs in navigating nursing pathways in Canada. We will also present key approaches to overcome IENs' barriers to employment and credential recognition in Canada.

Anti-Racism at the Intersection of Intergroup Relations and Identities: A Toolkit Resource for Institutionalizing Equitable Integration

Canada's migration policies have contributed to increasing ethnic/cultural/other forms of diversity. The need for effective tools that will help institutions and workplaces address the emerging and evolving intersections of identity and inequities has become apparent. Across many institutional and organizational social settings, the role and responsibility of leaders and individuals in combatting racism, discrimination and prejudice, and promoting respectful intercultural dialogue has never been more vital. A Diasporic Identity in the Making: a Case of Hongkonger Canadian Immigrants from Hong Kong, which have been a major component of the Canadian diversity mosaic, have always been classified or self-identified as Chinese in Canada. However, in 2021 census, 81,680 people chose to identify themselves as Hong Kongers as their ethnicity. Among them, 59,255 were first-generation immigrants, 20,710 second-generation, and 1,715 third-generation. In this workshop, the presenters will trace the formation of this new identity and share findings of four empirical studies on the identity issues particularly among recent immigrants from Hong Kong.

Innovative Partnerships & Mentorship to drive Women in Skilled Trades & Engaging Immigrant Women in Skilled Trades: Addressing Local Skills Gap

The Women in Skilled Trades (WiST) program by Skills for Change is pioneering an innovative approach to increase the presence of newcomer and racialized women in the skilled trades sector. This abstract highlights how WiST utilizes a unique model of partnerships, targeted events, and tailored mentorship programs across Canada to address the intersectional needs of these women. By collaborating with over 50 stakeholders, including employers, trade schools, unions and local and national community partners, WiST creates a supportive ecosystem that empowers these women to succeed in trades, fostering diversity and inclusion within the industry.

Experiences of accessing services among women impacted by forced migration: A cross-sectoral community-academic partnership project

Many women living within intersections including migration, gender, race, and class are disproportionately affected by chronic health impacts while simultaneously facing limited social support, gender-based violence, and poverty. Addressing this health equity challenge through a community-academic partnership consisting of health and settlement organization leaders, we describe a research project grounded in inclusively engaging with the realities of women impacted by migration. Integrated knowledge mobilization (iKM) activities that were jointly generated will also be described and how they inform mapping our next steps within the nexus of health and settlement.

Predictors of Canadian Immigrants' Mental Health Status

Drawing from the dual-continua model, which assumes that mental illness and well-being are two interrelated, but separate dimensions of mental health, the present study analyzed a combination of psychological distress and well-being measures from the 2021 Canadian Community Health Survey (CCHS) and conducted a confirmatory factor analysis (CFA) to identify the factors most associated with Canadian immigrants' mental health status. Regression analyses were then used to estimate the effects of socio-demographic variables on mental health measures. Study results will be incorporated into the Canadian Index for Measuring Integration and Inclusion (CIMII) to enhance the ongoing assessment of the existing socio-economic and health disparities between immigrants and the Canadian-born population.

Immigrants and House Prices: Myths and realities

This workshop sheds light on housing issues related to immigrants. The first paper provides a theoretical discussion on house price underscores the complexity of the causes behind the rising housing prices in Canada. Public debates often attribute housing affordability issues to immigrant-driven demands, neglecting the broader economic contribution of immigrant entrepreneurship. It emphasizes the necessity for effective policies in balancing housing needs with the positive impact of immigration. The second paper uses national data to investigate international students' housing issues.

Dissecting and Measuring Corporate Diversity in Canada

The business case for inclusion and leveraging underutilized immigrant and refugee talent pools to address skills gaps to drive Canada's economy has been well-documented. However, measuring diversity and inclusion in the workplace, for immigrants and refugees, remains an elusive effort. This panel will present results from research that explored tools and systems to measure advancement, career growth, pay gap, and inclusion in company culture, among other, for immigrants and refugees, particularly from BIPOC, Asian, and other racialized backgrounds. Some of the project participating employers will also share their expertise and examples of tools used to measure inclusion and belonging.

Experiences of navigating public spaces: Perspectives from immigrant and refugee families with neurodivergent children and service providers

Parks, recreational, daycare and places of prayer are often spaces that immigrant and refugee families use to promote their health and well-being. In our study, we used a community-based participatory research approach to conduct interviews with 9 immigrant/refugee parents/caregivers with neurodivergent children and 17 service providers to learn how immigrant and refugee families navigate different public spaces. Study findings demonstrate that while immigrant and refugee families do encounter relational, environmental and systemic challenges, their personal and community assets helped them be proactive when navigating different physical spaces. Our findings emphasize the need for transformative educational and urban design initiatives.

Beyond legal status, citizenship is also the expression of a collective identity based on a shared sense of belonging to a national community. However, government-sponsored narratives of citizenship often differ from lived experience, which can obscure inequities. This workshop presents preliminary findings from three studies examining questions about such tensions. First, is multi-step immigration a contributing factor in the observed decline in Canada's naturalization rate? Second, how are equity-denied groups represented in Canada's citizenship guides over time? Finally, how is citizenship-related programming envisioned, delivered, and negotiated by the settlement sector in relation to a changing Canadian citizenship context?

Strengthening Capacity and Empowering Refugees: Skills for Change's Approach

This workshop focuses on Skills for Change's (SfC) comprehensive efforts to strengthen organizational capacity to support the complex needs of refugees. We highlight our multifaceted initiatives, including language training, mental health support, housing assistance, and tailored employment services. The workshop will also address the impact of emergency funding for asylum claimants, which has enabled the establishment of a crisis response team, marketplace events, and settlement and employment workshops. Particular attention will be given to the challenges faced by Sub-Saharan African refugees, who have encountered systemic racism. Our approach fosters community engagement, resilience, and supports the diverse needs of refugees.

Reducing Socioeconomic Barriers for Racialized Immigrant Women through Research and Advocacy for System Change

PIRS offers trauma-informed innovative programs to foster equity, socioeconomic integration and civic engagement among multi-barriered racialized immigrant women. Recognizing the importance of upstream work, PIRS engages with other stakeholders and community organizations to pursue system change projects aimed at removing structural barriers. The workshop will showcase three system change research and advocacy projects conducted in collaboration with the Migrant Workers Center and City in Color. All the projects focus on removing racialized immigrant women's access barriers to meaningful employment with equitable remuneration, safer workplaces free of discrimination and harassment, and affordable quality child care services in BC.

Health of newcomers has been shown to decline with time spent in Canada, as newcomers experience health inequities. The root causes of this phenomenon are complex; solutions require cross-sectoral collaboration. This session will report on how the National Newcomer Navigation Network addressed three key issues to improve social determinants of health and advance equitable care for newcomers. These issues are: access to professional interpretation in healthcare, denial of access to school for refugee children in temporary housing, and access to timely and accurate information for Afghan and Ukraine arrivals. Attendees will learn how to turn side-of-desk efforts into targeted, evidence-based tools.

Restoring Trust and Rebuilding Relationships in Uncertain Times

Canada is encountering and experiencing social uncertainty, structural change, and institutional challenges. A healthcare system whose weaknesses were exacerbated by the pandemic, rising costs of living and insufficient housing supply are central preoccupations. Canadians are concerned over strained relations between communities and a rise in hate, in particular, its expression and proliferation on social media.

Following presentations by Statistics Canada and the Association for Canadian Studies documenting the pressure points, societal issues and changes that Canada is facing, plenary speakers will focus on how best to strengthen relationship building between Canadians.

- Session Chair: Neelam Sahota, Chief Executive Office, DIVERSEcity Community Resources Society
- Gayatri Jayaraman, Director General, Justice, Diversity and Population Statistics Branch, Statistics Canada
- Jack Jedwab, President and CEO, ACS / Metropolis Institute
- Barbara Perry, Director, Centre on Hate, Bias and Extremism, Ontario Tech University / UNESCO Research Chair in the study of hate
- Robert Brym, FRSC, SD Clark Professor of Sociology Emeritus, Department of Sociology and Centre for Jewish Studies, University of Toronto

We wish to acknowledge support from PCH's Canada History Fund for those sessions dealing with knowledge transfer about Canadian identities as well as sessions addressing efforts at combating hate in Canada.

Rétablir la confiance et reconstruire les relations en période d'incertitude

Le Canada est confronté à des incertitudes sociales, à des changements structurels et à des défis institutionnels. Un système de santé dont les faiblesses ont été exacerbées par la pandémie, l'augmentation du coût de la vie et l'insuffisance de l'offre de logements sont au cœur des préoccupations. Les Canadiens sont préoccupés par les relations tendues entre les communautés et la montée de la haine, en particulier son expression et sa prolifération sur les médias sociaux.

Après les présentations de Statistique Canada et de l'Association d'études canadiennes sur les points de pression, les questions sociétales et les changements auxquels le Canada est confronté, les intervenants en séance plénière se pencheront sur la meilleure façon de renforcer les relations entre les Canadiens.

Canada has long drawn on migrant racialized women to engage in low-paying care work in Canadian households. While permanent status for some care workers was hard won through decades of activism, worker precarity and exploitation persist, especially under Canada's recent home care worker programs. Does volunteer social support really improve refugee integration? Lessons from adapting and evaluating the Welcome Group Program

Volunteer social support for refugee integration sounds like a good idea, but does it really work? This workshop explores this question through the perspective of Together Project's Welcome Group Program, which it brought to Surrey, B.C. in partnership with DIVERSEcity, as part of a three-year long IRCC-funded evaluation of how volunteers could improve newcomer integration outcomes through meaningful social support. Learn about how volunteer social support can make settlement services more effective and efficient, how the role of volunteers as community brokers can be defined and leveraged by local service providers, and how interventions like the Welcome Group Program can be adapted to local contexts to maximize impact.

Living arrangements and challenges among aging South Asian families in Canada

Canada's population is aging and becoming more diverse; for the first time in Canadian history, there are more seniors than children and approximately thirty percent of Canada's seniors are foreign-born, many of whom were born in South Asian countries. This research focuses on the experiences of South Asian migrant families as they navigate aging within the context of migration. Using in-depth interviews with the South Asian migrant community in Canada (seniors and their second-generation children), this research explores the ways migrant families negotiate aging and care-giving within the context of migration, with a specific focus on the living arrangements and housing challenges of aging South Asian families in Canada.

Semi-structured interviews with 9 diabetes health providers (HP), recruited through purposive and snowball sampling, were conducted. Organized using Levesque et al.'s access to health care framework (2013), data revealed perceived inconsistency in T2DM management and referrals by HP, limited culturally relevant and Tamil services, limited technological accommodations by HP, and barriers such as limited access to information, fear of medication, delaying care, and financial barriers among Tamil older adults. This study supports improving HPs' awareness, interpretation services, and financial support to enhance approachability, appropriateness, and affordability.

Creating Successful Conditions for Newcomer Integration

Based on IRCC's robust data collection, measurement and analysis system (which allows for monitoring each point along the settlement continuum) this session will highlight several priority areas for creating successful conditions for newcomer integration. Reducing mental health inequities by incorporating language interpretation services

Language interpretation services are underutilized in healthcare, including mental health care. Immigrants and refugees experience significant mental health challenges due to pre-migration traumas and post-migration stressors. Inadequate language interpretation is a systemic inequity that leads to poorer mental health outcomes. This Roundtable addresses this structural barrier by sharing the Vancouver Island Counselling Centre for Immigrants and Refugees' model for interpretation and a roadmap for implementing these services in other settings. We will also facilitate a discussion about unique issues in mental health interpretation (e.g., continuity of interpreter), issues related to cultural brokering, interpreter training and supervision

“Anti-Asian racism and the pandemic in Canada: the experience of international students”

Findings from a recently completed SSHRC-funded national project reveal that Asian international students face challenges at the intersection of academics, lack of healthcare, precarious housing, and other social infrastructure failures, in addition to being victimized by various forms of racism and that these problems were exacerbated by the pandemic.

The process of migration can have an important impact on both destination and source countries. Among diaspora groups, distinct historic experiences and narratives have contributed to important variations in ongoing relationships with countries of origin and patterns of identity formation in countries of adoption. Over recent decades, changing migration patterns, globalization and technological advances have both facilitated and made more complex, these multifaceted relationships. In destination countries, responses to migration trends have generated both challenges and opportunities. This workshop will provide an opportunity to reflect on how evolving diaspora engagement affects policies and practices in migrant sending and migrant receiving countries.

Can AI be leveraged for more successful diversity and inclusion in recruitment and retention? Fact or Fiction

Hiring, recruitment and retention is in an interesting place, where potential candidates are now being sourced, contacted, analyzed and sometimes even interviewed using artificial intelligence. What are the pros and cons of employers using AI for hiring and the potential impact on the integration and inclusion of newcomers in the labour market.

The panel will share their thoughts and perspectives to set the stage. The moderator will then facilitate an interactive discussion with participants sharing their own insights and experiences.

Dead or Alive, But I Will Return: The Politics of Belonging and Arraigo in Young Guatemalan Migrants.

This presentation delves into findings from the Rights for Children and Youth Partnership (RCYP) Project, focusing on the phenomenon of arraigo (rootedness or sense of rootedness) among Guatemalan youth migrating to Canada and the United States. It investigates the impact of mobility and migration on youth's sense of belonging, utilizing Descriptive Phenomenology to illustrate the complexity and essence that define arraigo. Emphasizing the social and emotional challenges inherent in migration, we explore the diverse ways in which Guatemalan youth migrants navigate and articulate their connections to place, community, and culture while negotiating their identity and belonging in their new environments

Canada and the Syrian Crisis: Policy Responses and Public Narratives

Canada's 2015 Syrian refugee resettlement response was the fastest and second largest in the country's history. Journalists for Human Rights (JHR) is conducting a research study with members of Syria's ethnically diverse population in Canada to determine how this response was experienced by refugees and host communities alike. The study's findings will contribute to our understanding of how immigration policies impact vulnerable populations and how refugees and migration are addressed by the media in Canada.

There is a growth of partnerships in research involving immigrant and refugee families with neurodivergent children and organizations supporting them. However, guidance is rarely given to researchers on how to build research relationships with communities who often have intersecting identities (e.g., speakers of minoritized languages, those who are racialized and who are neurodivergent). In this roundtable, we present a guide for researchers on how to build meaningful research relationships with a variety of stakeholders. What it means to be a Young Muslim in Canada: Multiple, hybrid and racialized identities of Canadian Muslim Youth in the Negotiation of Belonging and Citizenship

Canadian Muslim Youth (CMY) encounter significant obstacles as they strive to forge meaningful and stable identities amidst ongoing conflicts in the Muslim world and tensions within the Canadian societal framework. These complexities often leave Muslim youth feeling unsupported and misunderstood, complicating their identity formation journey. Through interviews and focus groups with CMY across Canada, this research explored the complex identities of CMY, focusing on integration, belonging, and identity negotiations. This roundtable will discuss findings and evidence-based recommendations from Muslim youth and community elders to foster positive development and an inclusive environment that acknowledges the complex identities of CMY.

Empowering BC Employers: Utilizing the Employer Insights into Newcomer Occupations Index to Bridge Labor Market Gaps

In this presentation, we will introduce the Employer Insights into Newcomer Occupations Index (EINOI), a powerful tool designed to assist employers in understanding and addressing labor market gaps in British Columbia. Through collaborative efforts including surveys, interviews, and open forums, we're actively seeking input from local employers to refine and enhance the tool's effectiveness. Our focus extends to key variables such as labor force participation, occupations and skill levels, wages, and language use in the workplace. With the EINOI, our aim is clear: to bridge skill disparities, promote inclusivity, and foster equitable opportunities for newcomers throughout BC's diverse labour landscape. Join us as we explore how EINOI can empower employers to make well-informed decisions in recruitment and workforce planning.

Health Awareness and Knowledge

Disparities in the quality of healthcare extended to vulnerable groups may reveal discrimination, but our responses to them don't have to. What would the future look like for newcomer youth & vulnerable groups if immigrant-serving organizations had mental health supporting initiatives, internships & assistive tech in place for clients who have yet to pass through their doors? How will the crystal ball predicting newcomers' future respond to the 'touch' of organizations who make the effort to have initiatives & tech in place for clients they've never met, for those who have a vision of accessibility, but may not know who will use the supports? What can we do to support turning social determinants of health into social determinants of healing and hope?

Adopting Innovative Technologies to Break Barriers and Integrate Disadvantaged Populations into Meaningful Employment

Integrating disadvantaged populations into the workforce requires an evolved approach that leverages AI. Panelists will discuss using real-time NOC-specific labour market data to guide newcomers on settlement and career choices. This data can be integrated with AI-powered career services to dynamically map out career pathways that meet employer needs. Additionally, the discussion will review how AI tools are customized to assist those with diverse needs or limited digital literacy, supporting pre-employment and job search. These platforms connect job seekers with employers committed to hiring newcomers, ensuring the right talent finds the right opportunities for better outcomes.

Addressing Barriers to participating in Federal Elections

For new Canadians over the age of 18, becoming a citizen means gaining the right to vote in a federal election. However, several barriers to participation in federal elections affect the number of new Canadians who vote, work, or run in an election. The goal of our presentation will be to share the ways in which our program, Inspire Democracy, works to address and reduce these barriers for new Canadians and to share the tools and resources that are available to help electors participate more equally. Our discussion will involve a voting simulation that demystifies the voting process for first-time voters and highlights the safeguards that are in place to ensure the integrity of the democratic process while sharing participant experiences.

Between 2014 and 2023, Canada has welcomed 425,000 refugees. Given the emergence of sudden and violent events, more people find themselves in need of permanent resettlement. In fact, the UNHCR (2024) reports that in 2024, over 117 million people are in refugee-like situations, a world record. At times, a larger than expected number of refugees arrive to Canada in a short period of time and because of the long-term chronic shortage of affordable housing, settlement service providers have no choice but to temporarily use hotels for the newly arrived newcomers. This presentation examines how the Canadian housing shortages and affordability-crisis affect the mental health of newly arrived refugees.

Faith as Fortress: Islamic spirituality and mental wellbeing within Canadian Muslim Youth

An equitable society requires recognizing diverse identities and fostering inclusivity. This study examines the challenges Canadian Muslim youth (CMY) face in accessing culturally relevant mental health services, highlighting Islamic spirituality's vital role in their well-being. Amid Western sociocultural complexities, Islamic spirituality is a crucial coping mechanism. Key recommendations include endorsing Islamic counseling and proactive community engagement to eliminate structural discrimination. The paper outlines Islamic spirituality's core principles and their practical implications for social workers, mental health practitioners, and policymakers. It also explores how spiritual connections help diasporas foster global understanding.

Perinatal health of ethnic minority women in Canada

Canada's multiethnic landscape, characterized by a significant population of immigrants and refugees, profoundly impacts the country's healthcare system, especially during the perinatal period. Factors such as socioeconomic status, cultural practices, access to healthcare, and discrimination significantly influence perinatal outcomes. This review, covering 45 studies from various Canadian regions, highlights the unique vulnerabilities faced by ethnic minority women, including higher risks of gestational diabetes, adverse birth outcomes, and increased mental health issues. Mothering in Exile

A narrative inquiry methodology has been used to gain insight into how Ukrainian mothers who came to Canada with the CUAET visa program make sense of their ruptured life stories and how they work to maintain their identities and lives in temporary conditions. Mothers engaged in conversations focused on their experiences as displaced mothers of school-aged children. In partnership with Slinko, Artist In Residence, a video recording is also being created. This poster presents the threads that resonate across the mothers' narrative accounts and the relevance of these threads to the temporary visa status of protected residents who are neither refugees nor permanent residents. The resonant threads include darkness, distancing, gaps, interruptions as the mothers experience displacement, recomposing lives, and shifting of dreams.

Culturally Relevant Food Offerings and Mental Health: A Narrative Inquiry into the Experiences of Refugees and Immigrants in Canada

This narrative inquiry attended the telling, retelling, and reliving experiences of refugee and immigrant families on culturally relevant food offering and its impacts on their mental health. Data includes field notes, transcripts of monthly conversations in a year with 3 families, and their artefacts. Findings show culturally relevant foods are not only refugees and immigrants' survival but also their sense of belonging, identity, and dignity; connect families, teachers, social workers, and communities to best support refugee and immigrant children; and, value as intergenerational wisdom and medicine for their mental health. Finally, more resources on culturally relevant food offerings should be provided to refugees and immigrants.

Social Capital, Delivery Modality, and Sociodemographics: Exploring Factors Associated with Sense of Belonging among Newcomers in LINC

Using recent survey data from newcomer language learners in the LINC program at NorQuest College, this study examines factors associated with sense of belonging among newcomers in Canada, including sense of belonging in Canada, province of residence, community, and the LINC program. The analysis examines the role of service delivery modality and various identity markers (e.g., gender, age, and visible minority status), socioeconomic status (education, employment, and income), and other sociodemographic factors, including time since arrival in Canada, and discusses implications for settlement programming and service provision that aims to enhance newcomers' subjective well-being.

Profiles of solidarity and collective action from immigrants to Indigenous peoples in Canada

Our research aimed to investigate factors influencing intergroup solidarity and support between immigrants and Indigenous peoples. From January to May 2024, we surveyed 285 immigrants and refugees across Canada on their: 1) Identification with a group victimized by race/ethnicity, 2) Knowledge of Indigenous cultures and colonization, and 3) Beliefs on societal fairness and hierarchies. Four distinct groups with varying levels of victimization, knowledge, and societal beliefs emerged from the data. These groups differed in their backgrounds, as well as their solidarity and policy support for Indigenous peoples and issues. This study can inform policies and programs enhancing immigrant-Indigenous relations and, ultimately, reconciliation.

Artistic and Socially Inclusive Processes facilitate Knowledge Exchange

Research dissemination processes can be socially-inclusive, dynamic and entertaining, reach participants on affective and cognitive dimensions, and occur within a complex schema of interactions. Theatrical sketches shared initial insights reflecting deep concerns of racialized and non-racialized immigrants and invited 'real-time' reflection leading to constructive knowledge transfer and reciprocal dialogue with parents, staff and non-profit community service providers at a school community event. This poster affirms that effective dissemination and knowledge exchange occurs when the content and process are customized to context, thereby stimulating dialogue, enquiry and heightened curiosity and understandings across participating groups.

Perceptions and practices of employment counselors regarding discrimination experienced by immigrants.

Discrimination experienced by immigrants is a challenge for employment counsellors working for immigrants' social and professional integration.

This poster highlights the results of a study based on semi-directed interviews, role-playing and in situ observation of employment counsellors working with immigrants in 24 organizations in Quebec. This study aims to understand counsellors' perceptions and practices regarding discrimination. The analysis revealed a diversity of positions and modes of action, reflecting both cognitive biases and reference frameworks regarding the discrimination experienced by the immigrants.

This research raises the question of best practices in the fight against discrimination and racism.

Institutionalizing Immigrant and Refugee Supports: Addressing Social and Academic Barriers to Enhance Integration and Success in Post-Secondary Institutions

Immigrant and refugee students in Canadian schools and post-secondary institutions face significant barriers including language, cultural differences, structural discrimination, and financial issues. Addressing these challenges require a comprehensive support system that integrates social and academic assistance to foster success. Creating inclusive learning environments with mental health support is crucial. Additionally, improving the understanding and awareness of non-migrant Canadians about diversity and migration can help to strengthen intergroup relations. This paper identifies the specific barriers faced by immigrant and refugee students and discusses strategies to mitigate.

Breaking Down Barriers for Newcomer/International Students: Advancing Internationalization Equity in Curriculum and Student-Facing Services

This poster/paper presents new research findings from a project conducted to identify and address equity barriers, and reduce disadvantage for international or newcomer students within two spheres of student experiences: (a) curriculum/classroom and (b) student-facing services. The mixed research team consisting of both college faculty/staff and student researchers apply an equity, diversity, inclusion and decolonization (EDID) lens to frame the research, analyze results and report on preliminary findings and insights at one of the largest community colleges in Western Canada. Transferable aspects of this research and its implications for mobility justice and equity in the post-secondary landscape are also discussed.

Informal Caregiving Among Racialized Groups with Heart Failure: A Scoping Review

HF disproportionately burdens patients who identify as members of racialized identities. The purpose of this review is to map the existing body of literature in the field of informal caregiving in racialized groups for HF patients. 446 studies were identified and screened by title and abstract. Of these studies, 74 met the inclusion criteria for full-text review, and 24 were included. The following themes were identified: The Importance of Social Support for Informal Caregivers of racialized patients; Barriers to HF care; Navigating the Healthcare System; Caregivers' Perception of a Life Interrupted; Caregiver Burden; The Role of Religion and Spirituality, Culture, and Ethnicity in Patients and Caregivers Navigating HF; Financial concerns.

Technology Integration in Settlement Services for Newcomers to Canada

This presentation will include a literature-based summary of the different kinds of technology that is being used in the immigrant settlement sector, along with the examples from the settlement agencies across Canada. It will also bring up the potential of AI integration in this sector to reduce barriers and disadvantage.

Relations among acculturation, well-being and language loss in young adult South Asian immigrants Culture plays a crucial role in adjustment, but immigrants can experience loss of identity. Language plays a key role in connecting one to their heritage culture. The present study explores acculturation and the impact of heritage language loss on well-being in young adults from the South Asian community across genders. Preliminary results show a negative correlation between well-being and acculturation ($r=-.266$), and a positive correlation between well-being and acculturation ($r=.276$). The correlation between well-being and heritage language skill approached significance ($r=.051$). Understanding gender disparities and how loss of culture affects well-being within the South Asian community can facilitate service delivery.

Activating Citizen Engagement in a Working-Class, Immigrant

Through the use of archival documents, this poster presentation will showcase the activities of the Toronto Portuguese Committee of the East Timor Alert Network (1992 – 2000), illustrate how this group mobilized the community around a global human rights issue, fostered intergroup relations and challenged the de-politicized identities of Portuguese-Canadians.

Co-creation and Knowledge Dissemination Through Comics: Working with Newcomers To Tell Stories About Virtual Care

Newcomers' experiences of virtual care (i.e. clinical encounters by video or telephone) are influenced by their settlement journey, gender, employment, and social systems. Intersecting identities influence if and how virtual care translates into compassionate healthcare. A group of researchers and Community Peer Researchers (CPRs) with lived experience came together to co-develop a comic that captures nuanced experiences of two personas with virtual care. Through the project, group dynamics and learnings evolved to reflect authenticity, respect, relevance, and accountability, highlighting the value of co-creation with persons with lived experience, and co-construction of roles in translating empowering narratives for migrant health.

Intersectionality of gender, immigration, and culture on acceptability of pedometer-based walking intervention

Menopause in the context of immigration can pose several challenges to immigrant women. South Asians represent the largest group of immigrants in Canada. Pedometer-based walking is the most effective intervention to improve symptoms of menopause, however, it is unclear if this intervention is acceptable to South Asian women. Previous research suggests low levels of adherence to exercise and high baseline risk factors for diabetes and cardiovascular disease in South Asian women. This study found the pedometer-based 10000-step daily walking intervention to be acceptable to South Asian women. However, several determinants of health, including gender roles, immigration settlement, and cultural norms, influenced physical activity participation.

Exploring the preventable lifestyle risk factors of newcomers in Montreal, Quebec

Newcomers are highly susceptible to chronic illnesses, such as cardiovascular disease, metabolic disorders, mental health conditions, and certain cancers. This community-based participatory research used concurrent mixed-methods to identify preventable lifestyle risk factors among newcomers living in Montreal, Quebec and understand the barriers and facilitators affecting their modification. Preliminary findings point to barriers such as limited physical activity, high cost of nutritious ingredients, time constraints, and various mental health stressors. Conversely, support from family and friends, community-driven social events, and learning about affordable, nutritious ingredient alternatives emerge as facilitators.

Social determinants

This study examined how employment serves as a crucial social determinant of well-being among highly qualified recent immigrants in Canada, particularly when engaged in precarious work. Interviews with 42 recent immigrants in two Canadian cities found that despite their high qualifications, many faced underemployment, contributing significantly to their psychological stress. Key themes include challenging workplace conditions, the influence of immigrant status on perceptions and experiences, and coping mechanisms employed. Recommendations included increasing employer awareness, revising policies for safer, culturally inclusive work environments, and offering specific occupational and mental health training and services.
