Reconciliation, Recognition and Unity: What is the vision for Canada?

The spring federal election gave rise to a resurgence of Canadian patriotic sentiment owing mainly to veiled threats of annexation from US President Donald Trump. The campaign saw little conversation about the foundations of Canadian identity in its various expressions and thus Indigeneity, official languages, diversity and/or immigration were not the object of much attention.

In the election's aftermath there has been increasing talk about Alberta separation with the province's Premier raising the prospect of a referendum on the issue. Our speakers will share their vision of the country and identify and discuss the current challenges to unity.

1ère Séance plénière

Réconciliation, reconnaissance et unité : Quelle vision pour le Canada?

Les élections fédérales survenues au printemps ont ravivé un élan patriotique chez les Canadiens, en grande partie en réaction aux menaces d'annexion à peine voilées du président américain Donald Trump. Pourtant, la campagne a suscité peu de conversations sur les fondements de l'identité canadienne dans ses diverses expressions. Ainsi, les questions liées à l'indigénéité, aux langues officielles, à la diversité et/ou à l'immigration sont demeurées largement en marge des débats.

Au lendemain de l'élection, les discussions autour d'une possible séparation de l'Alberta se sont multipliées, le premier ministre de la province ayant même évoqué la tenue d'un référendum sur cette question. Nos intervenant(e)s exposeront leur vision du pays, tout en identifiant et en analysant les défis actuels sur la question de l'unité.

Technology Use in Language Training and Translation for Immigrants

This panel will provide an in-depth review of Canada's language training programs, assessment frameworks, and emerging technology-enabled innovations along with best practices for effective integration and implementation. These initiatives provide foundational understanding of language skills and literacy assessment across learning contexts. The evaluation of technology integration in language education further demonstrates the potential for integrating digital tools to improve language learning experiences. Together, the panel will underscore the promising opportunities for technology-enabled innovations in language training programs to ensure greater accessibility, effectiveness, and inclusivity.

Tailored Attraction, Integration, and Retention Strategies for Northern Ecosystems (TAIGA RISE)

Tailored Attraction, Integration, and Retention Strategies for Northern Ecosystems (TAIGA RISE) is a three-year project responding to demographic shifts in Northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories through a citizen science research approach. Amid population decline and slow immigration growth, these regions face challenges in welcoming and supporting newcomers. TAIGA RISE will co-develop community-driven strategies to strengthen local capacity in attracting, integrating, and retaining immigrants—helping these communities meet labour needs, support newcomer inclusion, and improve long-term settlement outcomes.

Inclusive Civic Engagement: Exploring Permanent Resident Voting Rights in Saskatoon

Saskatoon's growing diversity is reshaping our city's social, cultural, and economic fabric. Yet thousands of permanent residents — who contribute daily to the vitality of our communities — are excluded from participating in municipal elections. Our community-based research project, conducted in collaboration with Saskatoon Open Door Society, the City of Saskatoon, and the University of Saskatchewan, examined the perspectives of permanent residents and local leaders on the possibility of granting municipal voting rights to permanent residents. We will talk about findings from our research and place them in the broader context of trends on immigrant and refugee voting rights and highlight the innovative, cross-sector partnership.

IMPRESS: Building Evaluation Capacity and Data-Driven Programming in Canada's Settlement Sector

Tired of struggling to know what questions to ask—or how to make sense of the answers—to improve your services and client experience? You're not alone. That's why the YMCA is launching IMPRESS—an IRCC-funded, three-year initiative designed to help the sector lead with evidence. Join this interactive workshop for early access to our multilingual client feedback question banks for settlement services, equity-centered evaluation approaches, and a sneak peek at the upcoming IMPRESS platform—what it does, how it works, and when it's coming. We'll also share our national training rollout for 800 staff. Come ready to shape what matters

Aspire for Employment Equity (for canadian muslim & racialized women)

The Canadian Council of Muslim Women (CCMW) conducted a national employment study in 2024 titled, "Still Overqualified & Underemployed? Canadian Muslim Women's Experiences on Barriers and Facilitators," authored by Dr. Sarah Shah.

The study found that Canadian Muslim women are significantly under- and unemployed compared to the general Canadian population, and are less likely to hold senior or middle management positions. CCMW would like to present the ASPIRE study findings and systemic employment barriers experienced by Muslim Canadian women with summit attendees.

A Tapestry of Care: Towards Better Access for Cultural Community Groups

Newcomers face the risk of adverse settlement outcomes if mental health issues are not addressed. Yet there's a significant underutilization of mental health resources. With a unique community-centric approach, the Tapestry Project, a collaboration between two settlement organizations and ethnocultural communities, creates trust and belonging by weaving together community outreach, awareness-raising, capacity-building and systems navigation to increase access to mental health supports for diverse communities in Calgary. Learnings of an ongoing developmental evaluation will be shared, offering ideas for a more diverse system of mental health care to better suit diverse community needs.

March Towards Inclusivity: From Rural Roots to a National Tool for Belonging A journey from local storytelling to cross-sector impact in schools, workplaces, and communities

This presentation involves a series of interactive, discussion-based activities designed to promote inclusivity, self-awareness, and bias recognition. Through role-playing, movement-based activities, and guided conversations, participants of all ages are invited to reflect on their lived experiences and explore how bias, stereotypes, and systems of inequality show up in everyday life. The goal is to help people recognize their own biases, learn how to challenge them, and build more inclusive and welcoming environments—whether in schools, workplaces, or the community.

Asian-Indigenous Relations in Settler-Colonial Canada Building Bridges Across Citizenship and Treaties

This workshop responds to the question “What does the threat to unity imply for fostering diverse identities and Reconciliation with Indigenous Peoples?” Specifically, it explores the complex relationships between Indigenous Peoples and Asian Canadian settlers across Turtle Island. It will be hosted by members of the Asian-Indigenous Relations Collective, comprised of scholars and community members theorizing and working through Asian settler colonialism in the Canadian context. We will explore how we can (re)-imagine relationships between Asian Canadian settlers and Indigenous lands and life, how this relationship operates within, yet challenges the project of “reconciliation,” and how it can build a new narrative of “Canadian” identity.

Addressing Barriers to Employment and Education for African/Black Immigrants and Refugees

This panel discussion, organized by the Centre for Black Development Options (CBDOC) and its think tank, Blank Thinktank for Development Alternatives, will delve into the systemic barriers that African/Black immigrants and refugees face in accessing employment and education in Canada. Despite often arriving as internationally educated professionals with valuable skills and experience, many encounter significant challenges in integrating into the Canadian labor market and educational systems. These challenges not only hinder their individual success but also represent a substantial loss of human capital for Canada. Taking Racism Seriously: The Experiences of Racialized Personal Support Workers

This study addresses a gap in the experiences of immigrant healthcare staff through qualitative interviews with 51 racialized Personal Support Workers (PSWs) employed in diverse healthcare sectors in Ontario. Thematic data analysis of the interviews revealed that participants experienced discrimination and exclusion from employers, clients, and colleagues. These experiences negatively affected their physical and mental health. Racial diversity is increasingly encouraged to improve workplace productivity and profitability. Employers must take targeted measures to build a culture that focuses on equity and inclusion to reap the benefits of a racially diverse workforce and prevent negative outcomes for patients and healthcare employees.

South Asian Cultural Competency through the Integrated Holistic Service Delivery Model

This workshop explores culturally competent care through the lens of the Integrated Holistic Service Delivery Model (IHSDM), with a focus on working with South Asian communities. Participants will learn about mental health trends, collectivist values, intergenerational trauma, and the impact of migration. The IHSDM model emphasizes building trust, understanding family and community dynamics, and creating flexible, collaborative, and client-defined goals. The model challenges rigid systems by adapting to clients' evolving needs and welcoming long-term engagement. This approach supports more respectful, effective care that centers identity, autonomy, and culturally informed, client-centered care.

Shaped by Indigenous presence, colonial histories, and ongoing migration, understanding complex identities and relationship is critical to building a more just and inclusive Canada. Born out of the Covid-19 pandemic, THREADS: Cultural Conversations explores how cross-cultural learning can help us navigate layered realities of race, identity, and belonging through sharing stories and lived experiences. Featuring local and international voices, THREADS fosters intercultural dialogue to overcome challenges of race relations and support stronger relationships between Indigenous, non-Indigenous, and newcomer communities. As it evolves beyond the pandemic, THREADS looks to gather insights to expand community and cross-cultural learning.

Documenting Social and Economic Inequalities: Lived Experiences of Racialized Immigrant Women

This session examines the complex social and economic barriers encountered by racialized immigrant women in Canada. Contributors explore how intersections of race, ethnicity, class, gender, religion, and immigration status shape these experiences. Presentations offer critical insights into the systemic barriers faced by racialized immigrant women, while also illuminating the strategies women employ to resist marginalization. Through critical engagement with both individual and collective actions, as well as institutional structures in public and private life, this session highlights how multiple forms of inequality are produced, but also emphasizes the strength, resilience, and agency of racialized immigrant women.

Mapping Identity and Belonging: Integration Through Intersectional Identity and Spatial Lenses

This workshop examines the perspectives of both rural and urban communities on identity, belonging, and integration. Drawing on insights from ethnocultural communities, as well as clients and staff at the Calgary Catholic Immigration Society, this exploration examines how intersectional identities shape the lived experiences of belonging. Racialized immigrants are often perceived through reductive categories such as immigration status, gender, religion, or race, overlooking the complexity of their whole selves and impacting their integration. The session also considers how spatial belonging reflects dynamics of power, inclusion, and exclusion, influencing Muslim youth's institutional and spatial experiences in higher education.

Breaking the Silence: Temporary Foreign Workers, Inequality, and Community Response

The Temporary Foreign Worker (TFW) Program at Saskatoon Open Door Society supports TFWs facing racialized exploitation, unsafe work conditions, and social exclusion. Through culturally responsive, trauma-informed approaches, the program offers emergency aid, referrals, and advocacy to help workers reclaim their rights and access essential services. Multilingual and culturally appropriate disaster communication: a case study of Congolese and Indian communities in Albury-Wodonga, Australia

As climate change worsens, rural and regional areas in Australia are being increasingly affected by bushfires, floods, storms, and heatwaves, and similar dynamics are affecting Canada. In Australia, the increase in frequency and severity of disasters is coinciding with an increase in international migration to regional areas. Consequently, the effective communication of disaster information in multiple languages and in accessible and culturally appropriate ways is an emerging challenge for regional communities. This paper presents a study of Congolese and Indian community members' experiences of disaster communication in the large regional town of Albury-Wodonga, Australia. Key findings include the challenge of linguistic diversity within communities and the importance of religion, culture, and context in shaping understandings of and response to disaster.

One Country, Many Voices: Language Access, Policy, and Equity in Canada

Despite advances in standards, interpreting best practices, and policy, Canada still struggles with equitable language access. This roundtable invites dialogue on access for migrant, Indigenous, signed, and official languages. We'll explore how shared understanding of key concepts can drive coherent policy, procurement, and systemic change. A national conversation is overdue—particularly at a time when interpreters, educators, and service users must navigate shifting systems, evolving terminology, and disruptive technologies like AI that are reshaping the landscape of access, service delivery, and accountability. While often seen as promising solutions, perceptions of AI and similar tools can inadvertently obscure the complex, human-centred.

Sustaining Adaptive and Culturally Responsive LGBTQI+ Refugee Programs

AI Skills Training for Immigrant-owned SMEs

Artificial Intelligence (AI) is reshaping the global economy, promising significant advances in productivity, innovation, and competitiveness. Yet in Canada, despite being a global leader in AI research, talent development, and ethical frameworks, small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) are struggling to keep pace. Immigrants, who are considered a source to help with labour shortage in SMEs, are more likely to use AI on a daily basis, so the panel will focus on how to translate this to entrepreneurship. It will analyse the structural, financial, and human resource barriers holding SMEs back and introduces a practical, inclusive solution: a tailored AI Competency Framework designed to guide SMEs through the process of AI integration.

Collaborative design for effective change: Debunking myths and fostering understanding about religious, spiritual, and non-religious identities in SK

Religious, spiritual, and non-religious identities are complex. They co-exist with other aspects of identity but are rarely discussed. In this workshop, the Saskatoon Open Door Society (SODS), the Regina Open Door Society (RODS), and the Centre for Civic Religious Literacy (CCRL) present stories of how a misunderstanding or lack of understanding about these identities can create challenges for newcomers and staff in settlement agencies. They will explain how their collaboration in a 5-year project to promote religious literacy can reduce tensions around cultural and religious diversity by building mutual understanding and promoting reconciliation in Saskatoon, Regina, and rural Saskatchewan.

Reimagining Integration: Combating Racism and Advancing Equity in International Student and Newcomer Services

This interactive workshop brings together educators, immigrant-serving professionals, policymakers, and community partners to address the racism and systemic barriers impacting international students and racialized newcomers across Canada. Drawing on lived experiences and research from Alberta, we examine how discrimination in postsecondary institutions, housing, employment, and community life undermines belonging, well-being, and long-term integration. Centering antiracist frameworks and the voices of those with lived experience, participants will engage in collaborative reflection and co-creation of equity-focused strategies. The session will guide attendees to: (1) identify exclusionary practices in education and service contexts; (2) apply practical anti-racism tools; and (3) develop action plans with measurable goals. Participants will leave with a toolkit of resources, tested strategies for fostering inclusive and culturally safe environments, and connections to a growing network committed to reimagining internationalization and newcomer support through a lens of justice, equity, and sustainability. Presenters will share a free anti-racism toolkit booklet with participants during the session which they can apply in their practice following the conference.

Region of Peel's Asylum Claimant Response – A Model of Leadership and Collaboration

The presentation highlights Peel's dynamic, comprehensive, and person-centered approach to effectively meeting asylum claimants' needs. The Region's initial emergency response saw local shelters operating at nearly 400% capacity and relying on ten hotels to provide temporary accommodations. Recognizing the urgency of the situation, Peel quickly shifted from an emergency response to a more sustainable, strategic approach, ensuring asylum claimants were completely separated from the local homeless system, demonstrating leadership in this area. Through extensive collaboration, Peel has established a dedicated asylum claimant shelter and has launched a Peel Regional Reception Centre Pilot in partnership with the IRCC and COSTI.

Amplifying Voices: How IWEN is Transforming the Entrepreneurial Landscape for Immigrant Women in NS

The Immigrant Women Entrepreneurship Network (IWEN) at ISANS is reshaping the entrepreneurial ecosystem in Nova Scotia by empowering newcomer and refugee women through practical training, mentorship, and community engagement. With hands-on business sessions, market showcases, and inclusive networking events, IWEN addresses systemic barriers and builds confidence. Strategic partnerships and intercultural training further promote gender equality and inclusion. This presentation will highlight IWEN's holistic approach, its impact on over 45 women from 18 countries, and how targeted support fosters economic empowerment and meaningful participation in the business landscape.

De l'analyse à l'impact : Renforcer notre compréhension des enjeux liés aux communautés immigrantes francophones en milieu minoritaire au pays

Cet atelier interactif offre une double perspective, en présentant d'abord les premiers constats de CAPACITÉS, une initiative nationale financée par IRCC pour renforcer les capacités d'évaluation dans le secteur de l'établissement. À partir de consultations avec des FS, nous explorons ensemble ce qui fonctionne, ce qui manque et ce qui est possible. Dans un second temps, le RDÉE Canada proposera un panel de discussion en présentant les premiers résultats d'un projet de recherche portant sur les pénuries de main d'oeuvre dans le domaine

The Evolution of Canadian Identities: 2019 – 2025

The Environics Institute for Survey Research will host a workshop focusing on Canadian identities, based on the Confederation of Tomorrow survey research program that has been conducting annual national surveys on an annual basis since 2019. The workshop will explore the relationships between different types of identity (with Canada, with one's region, province or territory, and for Indigenous Peoples with their nation and community), focusing on the 2025 results and how identities have evolved over time. It will examine the extent to which different identities overlap or compete, and whether they are shifting in reaction to recent political developments in Canada and the U.S.

The Confederation of Tomorrow surveys give voice to Canadians about the major issues shaping the future of the federation and their political communities. They are conducted annually by an association of the country's leading public policy and socioeconomic research organizations: the Environics Institute for Survey Research, the Centre of Excellence on the Canadian Federation, the Canada West Foundation, the Centre D'Analyse Politique – Constitution et Fédéralisme, the Brian Mulroney Institute of Government, and the First Nations Financial Management Board.

Each national survey is conducted online or by telephone with a large representative sample of Canadians ages 18 plus (n=6,000) that provide robust representation from all provinces and territories, as well as First Nations and Métis populations. The 2025 survey is currently in the field.

The presentation will be led by Environics Institute Executive Director Andrew Parkin, with contributions as presenters or discussants from one or two colleagues (such as (to be confirmed): Loleen Berdahl, Professor of Political Studies at the University of Saskatchewan and Executive Director of the Johnson Shoyama Graduate School of Public Policy; Arjun Tremblay, Associate Professor, Department of Politics and International Studies, University of Regina; Tom McIntosh, Professor, Department of Politics and International Studies, University of Regina; Shawn Blankinship, Data and Analytics Manager, First Nations Financial Management Board).

From Crisis to Contribution: A Journey of a Refugee with Resilience and Renewal

This client-led roundtable shares the real journey of a refugee family—from crisis to resettlement in Saskatoon. With support from the Saskatoon Open Door Society's Resettlement Assistance Program, they found safety, belonging, and purpose. Their story highlights how trauma-informed, culturally responsive services foster successful integration. The session will invite dialogue around resilience, dignity, and newcomer contribution, creating space to reflect and exchange best practices in refugee resettlement work.

JIAS Toronto will share their experience, lessons learned, and best practices when working with Saskatoon Open Door Society (SODS) to sponsor 205 Afghan schoolgirls in need of urgent resettlement. Participants will learn about the critical role of partnerships in refugee initiatives and the need for a coordinated approach in the provision of services and supports for vulnerable families in compliance with our SAH contract. This discussion will also touch on the issue of affordability and the need to encourage immigration to smaller communities while ensuring the level of settlement support remains consistent Changing Directions on Immigration: Are we on the Right Track?

It has been one year since the Government of Canada announced a 25% reduction in permanent immigration targets, citing alignment with economic needs. These cuts were unevenly distributed, affecting regions and immigrant categories in different ways. At the same time, significant changes have been introduced to the admission of temporary foreign workers and international students. This session will examine the implications of these shifts for population growth, labour markets, and national identity. Panelists will also explore the role that immigrant service providers should play in shaping Canada's evolving immigration landscape.

Changement de cap en matière d'immigration : Sommes-nous sur la bonne voie ?

Il y a un an, le gouvernement du Canada annonçait une réduction de 25 % des seuils d'immigration permanente, citant la nécessité de s'aligner sur les besoins économiques. Ces réductions ont été appliquées de manière inégale, affectant de manière différentes les régions et les catégories d'immigrants. En même temps, des changements importants ont été apportés à l'admission des travailleurs étrangers temporaires et des étudiants étrangers. Cette session examinera les implications de ces changements sur la croissance démographique, les marchés du travail et l'identité nationale. Les panélistes se pencheront également sur le rôle que devraient jouer les prestataires de services aux immigrants pour façonner le paysage évolutif de l'immigration au Canada.

Exploring the Dimensions of Canadian Identity and its Relationship with Prejudice, Multiculturalism, and Canadian Norms and Values'

We describe the results of an on-line study based on a representative, quota sample of 1083 Canadians of whom 40% (an intentional oversampling) were Canadians who immigrated to Canada as teenagers or adults. This study is registered on the Open Science Framework. Building upon the results of several previous studies, we used confirmatory factor analysis to identify six dimensions which capture the core components of Canadian identity. These dimensions, which form reliable subscales of a new Canadian Identity Scale (CIS), are belonging, cultural diversity, civic freedoms, Canadian norms, tolerance, and citizenship. The relationships between these subscales and various measures are presented with a particular focus on established measures of modern prejudice against immigrants, multiculturalism, and Canadian values. For example, we showed that the more the respondents felt proud that their country is culturally diverse, the more they endorsed multiculturalism ($r = .64$) and opposed prejudice against immigrants ($r = -.52$). Further, the more the respondents identified with Canada as a country that protects civic freedoms and the more they endorsed norms which emphasize that Canadians should be respectful, considerate, polite, and hard working, the more they valued Canada as a secure and stable country capable of protecting itself from outside threats ($r = .29$ & $.36$ respectively). We conclude with comments on the reliability and validity of the CIS and its usefulness as a psychological bridge which links together Canadians from very different cultural backgrounds and experiences and which fosters social cohesion nationally.

Settlement Language Training and Social Capital: The Role of LINC in Social Capital Development among Newcomers

This study explores how the Language Instruction for Newcomers to Canada (LINC) program impacts social capital development among newcomers in Canada. Using survey data from participants, it examines networks, community involvement, and access to network resources. Findings suggest LINC enhances newcomers' networks, intercultural communication, and community involvement. Blended learning formats yielded higher social capital development compared to online formats. Disaggregated data revealed differences by sociodemographic characteristics. The study underscores LINC's role in supporting integration beyond language acquisition, offering insights for improving online engagement and inclusive programming to strengthen social capital among newcomers.

Trump and Immigration: Discourse and Implications in the North American Space

This paper investigates significant immigration policy actions, discourse, and public narratives articulated during the first six months of US President Donald Trump's second term (January to

Drawing on a multi-source dataset, including executive orders and posts on Truth Social by President Trump, national media coverage, and discourse from congressional members, we conduct a discourse analysis to examine how immigration policy was framed, justified, and communicated. A Qualitative Look at Serious Legal Problems Faced by Chinese Canadians in Greater Victoria and Vancouver, BC

Chinese immigrants shared their experience with navigating serious legal problems in BC in a study centering lived experience. Cultural proximity, language access, trust, and the need for human connection were top needs. For legal information, participants relied on online and family or friends while also not having confidence in online, digital, and automated processes or workplace and provincial reporting systems. We recommend offline, in-person legal advice with cultural proximity because it creates better understanding, increases agency, and lessens isolation and the social and emotional hurt Chinese immigrants experience because of facing legal problems.

Les apprentissages identitaires francophones des CFA

Les Communautés francophones accueillantes (CFA) nous offrent une occasion privilégiée de découvrir la diversité croissante des identités francophones et acadiennes. La complexité grandissante de ces identités exige une attention plus intentionnelle de la part des communautés, afin de mieux comprendre les nuances culturelles et identitaires qui traversent la francophonie dans un contexte d'immigration bienveillante. Cependant, plusieurs niveaux de perceptions viennent parfois freiner l'authenticité de l'accueil et de l'intégration. En effet, la discordance entre les représentations du Canada, qu'elles soient véhiculées à l'international, dans certaines provinces ou à travers d'autres canaux, alimente des attentes de bilinguisme idéalisé et renforce une perception réductrice d'un «Canada anglais/Québec francophone».

Dans ce cadre, l'atelier comprendra une présentation de l'Observatoire en immigration francophone au Canada (OIFC), qui viendra enrichir la réflexion par des données et analyses sur l'évolution des identités et des dynamiques d'accueil.

Embracing Differences Has The Power To Unite Citizens

To reaffirm Canada became urgent when our identity as Citizens of Canada was confronted and prodded. It begged the question: How can two neighbours who have a trusted relationship make one feel threatened despite having shared values and beliefs? If under attack, can diversity truly transform into strength and lead us to unite? If 13 diverse economies of our provinces and territories can build one Canadian economy to secure our sovereignty and protect our values, can this be applied in our homes, workplaces and communities? In a pluralistic society, documenting barriers to inclusion is continuous work undertaken by citizens which eventually informs forward looking inclusion policies strengthening the merit of responsible citizenship.

The promise and the reality of economic well-being of immigrants: Through the lens of economic justice

Despite policy efforts at the provincial and federal governments, immigrants still face significant barriers to achieving economic well-being. Using a mixed-methods approach, we analyze federal and provincial policy documents and conduct qualitative interviews to document immigrants' unequal economic outcomes in employment, income, and economic well-being. We also recommend strategies to address these challenges and barriers to advance economic justice.

Navigating New Beginnings: A comprehensive Case Management for refugees with added supports of Crisis Support Services and One Year Window Program

Intimate Partner Violence in Newcomer Families

This presentation session looks at intimate partner violence (IPV) among newcomer and refugee families living in Saskatoon, Canada. It looks at the social, economic, and legal problems that make the settlement and integration hard, greatly affecting children's growth and well-being. The presentation will look at the complexity of this subject, the interventions, gaps with barriers in the system and way forward to make the initiative more resilient to support vulnerable newcomer clients and families.

Priceless Lesson: How Ukraine Crisis Response Changed Our Systemic Approach to Collaboration

This workshop features three organizations pivotal to the Canadian Ukraine Crisis Response, which saw the unprecedented arrival of 300 000 displaced Ukrainians. It will share insights on how their experience transformed collaborative approaches across the settlement sector and beyond. The workshop highlights the emergence of new actors, while rethinking roles and relationships. Panelists and participants will discuss valuable lessons that have profoundly influenced organizational operations and share their insights on partnerships with federal and local governments, international organizations and more.

Building a supportive and inclusive university community for newcomers with lived experience of displacement - Student Refugee Program at USask WUSC's Student Refugee Program of 160 annual student sponsorships is driven by a grassroots network of 100 Canadian colleges and universities and thousands of post-secondary youth and community volunteers. This workshop will share good practices for supporting refugee students to integrate into higher education spaces on campus and engaging the USask community to be more welcoming and inclusive. Perspectives from former refugee students/program alumni and current USask volunteers will contribute their experiences and learning.

Women, Climate, and the Skilled Trades Labour Crisis

Governments place heavy priority on the construction-related skilled trades for both workforce and economic development, and labour market forecasts cite extremely high job vacancy rates. In a male-dominated sector, women are thus a severely untapped labour pool. However, wait lists for training programs hamper the ability to meet labour market need and include women, and the trades have much distance to cover in reconciling their environmental impact while the need for workers invested in sustainability is becoming increasingly vital. This session will share research on the intersections between gender, race, and climate, and discuss ways that the skilled trades sector can dismantle systemic structures that present barriers to women.

Pathways for International Educated Health Care Professionals

In Canada, Internationally educated healthcare professionals (IEHPs) make up 13% of those with a post-secondary education in health-related fields, but these professionals are underrepresented and underutilized. IEHPs face a wide array of societal, organizational, and individual level barriers that stall international credential recognition, licensure processes, systemic discrimination, and inadequate support for helping IEHPs adapt to a new environment. This panel will draw on previous research, as well as existing data from Statistics Canada and OECD, to deliver an overview of Canada's current state of IEHP integration.

Confronting Systemic Barriers to Immigrant Integration'

Despite being vital to Canada's growth, immigrants continue to face systemic barriers to inclusion: credential devaluation, employer bias, and language discrimination. These are not isolated issues but reflect deeper institutional practices privileging Canadian experience and dominant cultural norms. This panel brings together researchers, practitioners, and community leaders to expose these inequities and explore solutions such as disaggregated data collection, digital literacy initiatives, and work-integrated learning. Centering immigrant voices, it reimagines integration beyond economic metrics. The panel includes three 20-minute presentations, followed by Q&A, highlighting barriers and pathways to equity for diverse immigrant groups.

Supporting internationally educated health professionals in overcoming integration barriers into the Canadian healthcare system through a collaborative interprofessional communication initiative

Canadian healthcare professionals are expected to communicate in interprofessional practices, but internationally educated health professionals (IEHPs) have often not been explicitly prepared for these complex workplace communications. ACCES Employment and CARE Centre for Internationally Educated Nurses have launched a new partnership with Centre for Advancing Collaborative Healthcare & Education to provide Interprofessional Communication & Collaboration trainings in critical communication skills to pre and post arrival IEHPs. Panel members will share their collaborative experiences and how this partnership supports nurses, physicians, and pharmacists in overcoming challenges in interprofessional communication and integration barriers.

From Barriers to Strategies: Job Readiness Workshops for Internationally Educated Nurses

Despite having their credentials recognized, many Internationally Educated Nurses (IENs) continue to face underemployment due to systematic barriers and skills mismatch. Through the Path2Practice for IENs program, we apply adult learning principles to deliver job readiness workshops tailored to IENs' unique needs. The workshops focus on personalized career planning and effective workforce integration. This session will highlight practical examples of adaptive curriculum design and measurable outcomes that have supported IENs in securing meaningful employment. The insights shared will be valuable to educators, employers, funders and policymakers striving to close the employment gap for internationally educated nurses.

Labour Trafficking in an Era of Shifting Immigration Policy

Labour trafficking is an egregious human rights violation that does not receive as much attention as other forms of human trafficking in Canada. Labour trafficking interventions are significantly impacted by immigration policies as well as the public's attitudes towards migrants. The Canadian Centre to End Human Trafficking will facilitate a discussion on how current immigration programs, policies, and perceptions impede efforts to address labour trafficking and, in some cases, enable the exploitation of migrants, international students, and refugees. Our shared learnings, including proposed solutions to these barriers, will inform our policy/advocacy work related to labour trafficking in Canada.

Enhancing Partnerships Among Francophone and Anglophone Settlement Providers for French-Speaking Minority Newcomers in Saskatchewan

French-speaking minority newcomers in Saskatchewan face unique challenges as immigrants and linguistic minorities. This session highlights the importance of collaboration between Francophone and Anglophone settlement providers to improve service access and integration. It explores joint initiatives, resource sharing and coordinated referrals, while addressing barriers like funding and staffing. Practical solutions include communication, advocacy, and capacity-building. Using local examples, the session offers best practices to support inclusive, bilingual newcomer services and promote Canada's values of diversity and linguistic duality.

From Insight to Impact: Working Together to Strengthen Outcome Measurement in Settlement Services

How can evaluation help immigrant-serving organizations (ISOs) improve programs, demonstrate impact, and make evidence-informed decisions? This interactive workshop shares early insights from PROSPECTS—a national IRCC-funded initiative designed to strengthen evaluation capacity across the sector. Through consultations with ISOs, we're hearing directly about what's working, what's missing, and what's possible when it comes to evaluation. Join us to explore how your organization can engage with tailored tools, expert advice, and peer learning. Your feedback will help shape sector-wide resources that reflect your realities and drive a shift toward outcome-based, community-centered practices.

Falling Through the Cracks: Immigrant and Refugee Women and the Inconsistencies of GBVH Protection at Work in Canada

Gender-based violence and harassment (GBVH) remains a pervasive and destructive problem in Canada. Recently, we conducted a review and comparative analysis of current legislation and strategic action plans to address GBVH in the world of work in Canada. Our findings show major inconsistencies across jurisdictional legislation, a significant lack of strategic action plans, and failure to engage in intersectional approaches to GBVH in workplaces. We raise critical questions of what these findings mean for immigrant and refugee women, who disproportionately experience precarious employment, discrimination, and lack of knowledge of workplace rights, all of which contribute to increased risk for and exacerbate GBVH at work.

Designing for Equity: A Community-Informed Blueprint for Supporting Immigrant, Refugee, Ethnocultural, and Racialized Women Facing Intimate Partner Violence

This presentation introduces COSTI Immigrant Services' Blueprint for Establishing Services for Immigrant, Refugee, Ethnocultural and Racialized (IRER) Women Facing Intimate Partner Violence, a research-informed, community-driven framework that addresses systemic gaps in service provision for marginalized women experiencing intimate partner violence (IPV). Developed through a multi-phase initiative funded by Women and Gender Equality Canada, the blueprint integrates qualitative research, survivor testimony, and frontline practitioner insights to propose a scalable, equity-centered service model.

Newcomer entrepreneurship and integration

This collection of presentations explores the intersection of immigrant integration, entrepreneurship, and inclusive economic development in Brandon, Manitoba. The interlinked research findings identify persistent challenges, including underemployment, barriers to credential recognition, service gaps, bias, discrimination, and a lack of flexible employment opportunities, and call for innovative initiatives. The research also reveals a disconnect between the available services and the actual needs of newcomers, highlighting the need for more coordinated, inclusive, and culturally responsive strategies, as well as improved access to localized data. These presentations will share key recommendations and a model to enhance newcomer integration.

POSTERS

P1 - Civic Engagements With Neighbours: Classifying the Ethnic Subpopulations of Canada

Civic engagement with neighbours is pivotal for developing a successful integration of immigrant and ethnic minorities into Canadian society. To promote stronger bonds to their neighbours it is essential to understand what types of communities are most in need of support. In this paper, using GSS 2013 and 2020 data, a classification scheme is developed to identify high and low-civic engagement ethnic communities based on selected social and demographic characteristics. The study identified four major dimensions and several clusters of disadvantaged communities.

P2 - Intergenerational conversations on Anti-racism: A Culturally Syntonic Resistance of Systemic Discrimination of Black Immigrant Youths in Alberta

Contemporary research shows persistent racial disparities impacting Black youth outcomes in Canadian contexts, particularly regarding mental health and academic achievement. This case study evaluates Sinkunia's Intergenerational Conversations on Anti-Racism program through Participatory Action Research, engaging 20 youths across three focus groups. The study explores the Community Healing and Resistance Through Storytelling (C-HeARTS) framework's adaptability within Canada's multicultural context, utilizing African Oral Traditional Storytelling for intergenerational knowledge transmission. Grounded in Critical Race Theory and Ubuntu Philosophy, the research explores themes of connectedness, collective memory, and critical consciousness.

P3 - Raising Adolescents in Migration: Autonomy, Culture, and Parenting Adaptation Among Yoruba Immigrant Families

This presentation explores how Yoruba immigrant parents in Canada navigate parenting and autonomy support while raising adolescents. Drawing on semi-structured interviews with Yoruba parents, the study applies Self-Determination Theory and the Theory of Sociocultural Models to examine how parents negotiate traditional values of authority, respect, and communal responsibility alongside Canadian norms of independence and open dialogue. Findings highlight parents' dynamic processes of cultural adaptation, identity negotiation, and intergenerational learning, offering insight into immigrant parenting, integration experiences, and culturally responsive practice in diverse Canadian contexts.

- Temilorun Akinola, University of Alberta

P4 - Activity participation supported by formal programs for older Japanese Canadians

This photovoice study explored how formal programs and services support meaningful activity among older Canadians of Japanese descent residing at Momiji Residence, a culturally specific senior housing community in Toronto, Canada. Data was collected through interviews, focus groups, and photovoice with tenants, staff, and caregivers. The findings show that cultural identity, autonomy, and social connection are important for aging well. In addition, language barriers and cognitive changes were noted as challenges in program planning. Overall, the study highlights the need for flexible, inclusive programs that support aging in place within diverse communities.

P5 - Ford's model minorities: Mapping Asian settler colonialism in the Greater Toronto Area

Provincial and federal electoral data for the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) indicates that visible minorities increasingly vote Conservative (Elcioglu, 2025). Simultaneously, the Conservative Ford government has steadily prioritized resource extraction and land development over Indigenous treaty rights (Needham, 2025). This paper seeks to link these occurrences through a framework of Asian settler colonialism, suggesting that support of Conservative governments amongst Asian diasporas, bolstered by Ford's right-wing populism (Zambito, 2022), can be seen as a complicity with the settler colonial project, wherein diasporic communities are offered economic gains in exchange for the political power needed to attack Indigenous treaty rights.

P6 - Professional Development for Whom? A Critical Scan of Equity Gaps in Social Work Education

This poster shares findings from a 2024 market scan of professional development opportunities available to social workers across Alberta. With the Faculty of Social Work (FSW) at the University of Calgary recognized as a provincial leader in social work education, this project aimed to assess the current landscape and identify critical gaps, especially for racialized, immigrant, and community-based practitioners.

P7 - How Community Income Tax Clinic Supports Financial Literacy, Economic Security, and Resilience in Newcomers and Refugees

This poster presentation will highlight the frontline experience, successes, and lessons learned from the free Community Income Tax Clinic hosted at the Saskatoon Open Door Society. By offering free tax-filing support to newcomers and refugees, the clinic addresses systemic barriers to financial inclusion and supports equitable access to government benefits and credits. The session will demonstrate how free tax clinics are an integral part of settlement services, fostering economic integration, and reducing economic inequalities for newcomers.

P8 - Ford's model minorities: Mapping Asian settler colonialism in the Greater Toronto Area

Simultaneously, the Conservative Ford government has steadily prioritized resource extraction and land development over Indigenous treaty rights (Needham, 2025). This paper seeks to link these occurrences through a framework of Asian settler colonialism, suggesting that support of Conservative governments amongst Asian diasporas, bolstered by Ford's right-wing populism (Zambito, 2022), can be seen as a complicity with the settler colonial project, wherein diasporic communities are offered economic gains in exchange for the political power needed to attack Indigenous treaty rights.

P9 - Creating successful conditions for newcomers

This paper examines the ways newcomer Afghan women (NAW)'s overcome barriers to higher education in British Columbia, through a qualitative analysis of interview data. A participatory research design, grounded in postcolonial feminist theory, was employed to centre the lived experiences and priorities of these recently resettled women refugees. Access to higher education emerged as a central concern within the community. The study foregrounds the voices of NAW as they describe their experiences navigating the processes of admission, enrolment, and completion in postsecondary education. The analysis identifies both personal and institutional factors that facilitate their academic success.

P10 - The Arabic Community of Canada: Insights from the Canadian Census

This poster presentation reveals key demographic findings about the Arabic Community of Canada using Census data (2001-2021). It presents the community's significant growth over two decades, details its evolving geographic distribution across provinces and cities, and highlights shifts in gender composition. Focusing solely on mother-tongue speakers rather than ethnic origin (Hence, the use of the term 'Arabic' as opposed to 'Arab'), these results provide crucial evidence on the community's changing demographics. Understanding such a linguistic community is vital for researchers, practitioners, and policymakers who seek to address their specific needs and circumstances and support their integration and well-being.

- Yousef Khalifa Aleghfeli, Toronto Metropolitan University\

P11 - Social and familial impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic: Intergenerationality in multigenerational immigrant families

The COVID-19 pandemic resulted in a significant impact on migration policy and immigrant settlement. As part of a larger SSHRC-funded study focused on intergenerational relations among immigrant families, this qualitative research explores the kin relations between adult children hosting or sponsoring the migration of their elderly parent or grandparent to Canada. Up to 20 participant interviews with adult children in Ontario and British Columbia reveal adult children's complex relations across familial, financial and care dynamics with their parents to sustain the child-parent bond that is deeply impacted by the pressures of migration during a global pandemic.

P12- Navigating Perinatal Care: Barriers and Supports for Pregnant Latina Immigrants with Precarious Status in Toronto

This poster presents findings from a qualitative study examining how Latina women with precarious immigration status navigate access to perinatal care in Toronto. The findings reveal how legal exclusions, financial precarity, and discrimination intersect to limit access to essential healthcare. It also highlights the role of community-based support in addressing service gaps. The research contributes to ongoing policy conversations about equitable healthcare access and reproductive justice for immigrant women in Canada.

- Vida Carranza Capote, Toronto Metropolitan University

P13- Approches pratiques pour l'inclusion des futurs-arrivants francophones au Canada Atlantique

Le service avant l'arrivée de la FANE (Fédération Acadienne de la Nouvelle Écosse) propose des pistes concrètes pour l'intégration professionnelle des nouveaux arrivants francophones dans un monde du travail globalisé, notamment en démystifiant le processus de certification, qui est abordé non seulement comme un outil d'information mais aussi comme une démarche structurée d'inclusion. En explorant des stratégies pratiques, nous visons également à rendre explicite la culture d'entreprise en soulignant son rôle fondamental comme levier d'employabilité pour les personnes issues de milieux multiculturels. Cela démontre aussi, la contribution active de nos services de connexions communautaires dans l'inclusion des nouveaux arrivants en créant des liens sociaux, culturels et professionnels

P14- Socio-economic Integration and Settlement Experiences of Chinese Newcomers in Regina

The pattern of immigration to Saskatchewan has changed dramatically in recent years. This presentation reports findings from a study that explored the socio-economic integration and settlement experiences of recent Chinese immigrants from Mainland China residing in Regina. Through in-depth interviews with twelve participants, the study examined their motivations for immigration and settlement choices, experiences in navigating the labour market, perceptions of discrimination in recruitment and workplace environments, socio- cultural integration, coping strategies employed to overcome challenges, and future plans. These results offer valuable insights for improving policies, services, and workplace practices that support the integration of minority immigrants in Regina.

P15 - Changing Demographics in Saskatchewan: Key Factors Shaping Attitudes toward Immigrants

The arrival and settlement of immigrants bring significant social, cultural, and economic consequences for the host country. While Canada is a nation of immigrants, there have been historical periods when immigration has been viewed with antagonism. The negative attitudes and behaviour of the dominant group members may have devastating effects on minority and immigrant communities. This presentation will report the findings from a questionnaire survey that explored attitudes toward immigrants and the impact of immigration on national unity, security, and economic growth in a sample of 348 university students using binary and multinomial logistic regression.

P16 - Empowering Newcomer Youth: Overcoming Barriers to Employment, Belonging, and Inclusion through the Newcomer Youth Engagement Program (NYEP)

The Newcomer Youth Engagement Program (NYEP) supports youth aged 17–21 by addressing barriers to employment, education, and inclusion. Through English language instruction, life and employability skills training, and wraparound supports, NYEP equips youth to navigate Canadian systems. The program responds to social and economic inequalities by offering resume building, interview coaching, certifications, work placements, and volunteering. Strong cross-sector partnerships help overcome barriers such as lack of experience and competitive hiring processes. NYEP creates successful conditions for newcomers by fostering pathways to employment, education, and belonging—empowering youth to thrive and contribute meaningfully to Canadian society.

- Fafali Ahiahonu, Saskatoon Industry Education Council

P17 - Intrinsic or Extrinsic to Canadian Identity? National Cohesion through Identity Boundaries amid U.S. Pressures and Deglobalization

Canada departs from Anthony Smith's classical models of nationhood by constructing identity through multicultural distinctiveness. Amid U.S.-driven pressures, Canada's cohesion increasingly depends on conscious divergence—a nationalism rooted in localism, mental independence and discursive boundary-making that casts anti-immigrant and -DEI ideologies as alien to Canadian values. The fear of absorption—of losing distinctiveness—mobilizes narratives of resistance and identity preservation through diversity. Linking institutional resilience to national difference reveals a core strength of Canada's democratic tradition: its multinational foundation—Indigenous, francophone, anglophone, and immigrant—offers a saving bulwark amid deglobalization.
